Vitamin D helps bring balance to the immune system; it is a regulator which allows the optimal functioning of this extremely complex network of cells and cytokines.

Vitamin D is an anti-inflammatory agent. It works to check inflammatory responses after they are initiated. Uncontrolled inflammation is implicated in a staggering number of diseases, from autoimmune to cardiovascular diseases to cancer. A regular vitamin D regimen helps combat inflammation.

Vitamin D also offers several important anti-microbial effects (People with low vitamin D levels are actually more vulnerable to infections). It is required for the production of a peptide called cathelicidin, which fights off bacterial infections.
